A Pleasant Husband in Bohemia—Speculations as to the Grain Future.

The Latest Parisian Modes—Dresses, Boots, Fans, Hats, Hals, Trimmings, Etc., Etc.

Special Correspondent of the Chicago Tribune.
New York, Jan. 23.—It is now seriously believed by many persons in Europe that Russia and America are combining to change the climate of the central and southern parts of the Continent. The weather is severe in the land of the orange than in some districts of Northern Germany. The cold wave of the steppes has taken a Southern turn. The theatres were shut four nights in succession in Paris, and the good houses were closed. The houses were so terrified that purchases in the markets were made on the preceding day, although the Bora was blowing with a vengeance. Great distress is beginning to be felt all over Germany. Most of the farmers in Nassau have lost their crops. The oats in the Westerwald are lying exposed, and the potatoes are under. Private benevolence is active; one lady in Hessia is said to give 50,000 marks for charitable purposes. The most recent proofs of hard times among the farmers are the fact that farm-laborers and servants are now at a discount instead of at a premium. At the Servants' Fair at Metz (Alsace), there were 500 farm-servants and comparatively few farm situations. In Berlin, the Sunday before New Year's, when everybody was at church, the frost set in so fiercely on a watery ground that some ladies had to march in stocking-feet, and crowds joined hands, seeking safety in numbers.

AN AMERICAN DIPLOMATIST TO BERLIN intends to make Bremenstrasse, No. 67, as lively and congenial as he can to the "Colony." He gave his third reception on Dec. 27, for the express benefit of the American students who are residents of Berlin. These receptions will afford an opportunity for making acquaintances and are to be continued every week during February. A weekly diplomatic dinner was to be given during March. Miss White made her formal entrance into the Colony on the day of the Count Von Pernpach's birthday. It is a great thing in the Minister's favor that he is "der Deutschen sprache vollkommen mächtig," as the advertising formula is.

KARL BLIND
is known to be one of the great German Red Republicans, and one of the high-priests of Internationalism. He has written his first letter on the Irish movement to the Georgewer, and it betrays but little sympathy with the publican. He went to the Hyde Park meeting some time ago, because he would not trust "the reports of Irish reporters," who he says, monopolize the London press. There were not 10,000 people present, instead of 100,000. What most enraged him was the peculiar custom of the Irish marching with "religious" banners. "Most of them had a representation of John the Baptist, St. Aloysius, and St. Ignatius, and the like," he says. "I am a German, and I have not seen any of these saints before a large cross having on it the 'burning' heart. This latter reminded me of the heathen ceremonies known as Paphian or Sabean. It was Jeusidom; but there were no traces of a liberty, reform-loving people." Blind says all the French Liberals (Communists) have fallen in with the German Socialists, and that France would give up the lands to the Roman Catholic clergy if it were not for the landlords.

BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON

The Norwegian writer, has returned from his travels in America, and during the holiday week gave a lecture on "Republic" at Christmas (now, by the way, a city of some 115,000 inhabitants). His lecture was a warm, and, in the opinion of the German Princes of Europe were scarcely observed at the Paris Exposition, but the crowds every where hailed Gambetta as a national ruler." His lecture on "the course of history" convinced that the development of a people progresses more rapidly under a Republican than under a Monarchical form of government. He said that the French ought to be educated to understand and look forward to Republicanism. The lecture was received with hearty applause, and Bjornson was cheered.

AN UNAPPRECIATED PASTOR
The well-known rendering by Dean Swift of the opening prayer of the Episcopal service, "My dearest beloved People," might have been written by a person of some education in Aarau, Switzerland, who recently found that his congregation consisted of the clerks and one gentleman, a stranger to the town, who did not know a word of the language. He went to the Hyde Park meeting some time ago, because he would not trust "the reports of Irish reporters," who he says, monopolize the London press. There were not 10,000 people present, instead of 100,000. What most enraged him was the peculiar custom of the Irish marching with "religious" banners. It was Jeusidom; but there were no traces of a liberty, reform-loving people." Blind says all the French Liberals (Communists) have fallen in with the German Socialists, and that France would give up the lands to the Roman Catholic clergy if it were not for the landlords.

GERMAN LAWYER

The trials of private individuals on the part of the German law have been strikingly few in England, where the common law has been in many cases appropriated by landlords.

In Germany, where extensive forests have long been considered a privilege to allow the people to set foot in them at all, and now very stringent measures are enforced. The law of Hesse, for instance, has been in force for five years, and is a strict one. The law of Hesse, for instance, has been in force for five years, and is a strict one.

DUBLIN, Jan. 13.—Whoever may have traversed green Erin, from the Mountains of Wicklow to the wild yet rich scenery of Kilcarney or the stony wastes and grim fastnesses of Connemara, from the marsh country of the Burren to the rocky cities of the northwest, and the columnar wonders of the Causeway, the stranger who crosses the central plains (every landscape of cultivated or of waste or of vast reaches of dark bog has its boundary of verdure-clad hills or blue summits in the further distance), who sees the spreading loughs, the broad-flowing Shannon, and the rivers pouring into many estuaries, by which every province is watered, and who views the woodland regions and immense tracts of primeval forest of luxuriant, buoyant, though English example, must have felt the mystery and sorrow of the fact that such a kingdom remains but half utilized by the industrial default of its inhabitants, and that over a large proportion of its surface Ireland yields only poverty to tens of thousands who should be among the most happy and prosperous people on the earth. A climate mild and moist from the influence of the Atlantic, from the hill ranges in every maritime county, which condense the vapors of rain and from the humidity due to peat bogs, comprising a seventh part of the superficies of the island, is unpropitious for the ripening of full harvests of bread corn; and, indeed, the low summer temperature and the prevalence of cloud, especially in the south and west, render the sowing of wheat, and also of rye, a hazardous venture. But the atmospheric conditions favor the growth of oats, of green forage, roots, and grasses, and of natural pasture in proportion. Ireland is not tormented by great extremes of heat or cold, a dewy, a drizzling, and a still. In part, also, it is a garden of vegetables and fruits. Here it is a country which should at least be a paradise for the husbandman. If not with honey, and the wonder to a stranger is why Ireland, possessing few manufactures and little of mineral and metallurgical interest, should be one of the people from the mother soil, has not presented to the world a pattern of good management in every department of its husbandry. If the people are to be the chief factor in the well-being of the population, it is certainly not the quality of the soil which is to blame: for no one acquainted with the soils of Ireland can doubt that the soil of Ireland is to the light sand and poor clays of Flanders, or will compare their natural fertility unfavorably with the arable and pasture of Lancashire or of England. What is the Irish lands representative of the down and heaths which English husbandmen have wrought to a high pitch of productiveness? In Ireland, too, the same clays which English farmers now find to profits to cultivate are all but unknown.

Can lack of agricultural prosperity be attributed to the smallness of Ireland's population upon the limits of its cultivated land? So far as general average is concerned, the available area is, no doubt, of the same order as the acreage of land available for its cultivation. While in England 24,000,000 out of 52,000,000 acres of tillable land have been brought under crops and grass, in Ireland 15,000 out of 20,000,000 acres are under management, and this amounts to an average of two and three-quarters acres for each head of the population. In the United States, where the population is only one acre to the head; in Great Britain it is one and one-quarter acres; in Holland one and one-third acres; and up to three and one-half acres in the United States.

And the number of inhabitants in proportion to the capabilities of the country for maintaining them can scarcely be said to distinguish Ireland as a country, however, to be cast in a particular district. Judging by the example of Kingdoms in which it is admitted that the cultivators of the soil thrive, it appears probable that the average acre of land in the population more numerous than the existing 6,000,000, who, in parts of many counties, are alleged to be on the verge of starvation when the Poor Law visits them with an unpropitious season.

There is enough land in Ireland to be divisible into holdings averaging two acres each, for each of the various occupiers; and hence there can be no absolute necessity why a more ruinous non-removal of occupiers upon the limits of their cultivated land? So far as general average is concerned, the available area is, no doubt, of the same order as the acreage of land available for its cultivation. While in England 24,000,000 out of 52,000,000 acres of tillable land have been brought under crops and grass, in Ireland 15,000 out of 20,000,000 acres are under management, and this amounts to an average of two and three-quarters acres for each head of the population. The process-server.

The object of this formidable concentration of constabulary was to protect the process-server in the execution of his functions of executing certain tenants of Col. Clements. This gentleman is nephew of the late Lord Leitrim. After the late Earl's death there was a general assembly of the men of a Constabulary column slowly defining along the narrow road in front which led up from Lough Corrib. The Constabiles had been sent to the town to apprehend Col. Clements, who was their arrival which was announced by the horseman's pantomime. The column was clearly followed by the armed crowd, but Col. Clements said he had no knowledge that the intended waiting on him or he would have been present to meet them. Besides, he had no intention of going to the constabiles, who were also present. The proposal was also made under a difficulty when regard to their meeting at Harrow's Cross, as he had not heard what had been said there, or the proposal of the constabiles of lay him down to pass both Saturday and Sunday nights.

TOWN CONSOLIDATION.

Briefs of George W. Smith and James P. Root.

Briefs have been submitted to the Supreme Court in the case of the People, ex. rel. Frank Schack, vs. B. B. Bryant, on a petition for a writ of mandamus, by George W. Smith for the respondent, and James P. Root for the relator. The petition for mandamus, submitted by County-Attorney V. M. Lett in the case, which is one for the purpose of testing the legality of the proposed consolidation of the three Towns of North, South, and West Chicago into one, has already been published. Gen. Smith reviews the law from his standpoint, cites the relation of the towns, their debts, and the like, but does not say that the consolidation should not be imposed without the consent of the people, and that the respective obligations remain intact with the towns. His second point is that the question of uniting, or the continuing of the town in the event of uniting, is the third point made in the case of 1877, in which the towns have been had, in connection with the State Constitution in that it does not provide for submitting to the people the question of union, and that it establishes a system of government and association which are departures from the general system, etc. These points are treated at length, and next the consideration of the act of 1877, and the consolidation, and the consequences especially in the South Town are considered. He concludes with a discussion of the expedient of the proposed consolidation, and says it was born of the desire to live, but who is now
